Commentary

Within Sussex, two districts have levels of overall deprivation above the national average- Hastings and Brighton & Hove. In the last IMD figures, Eastbourne was also above the national average which shows that it has become less deprived relative to other areas. Hastings is the most deprived overall with a score of 33.11, which is very high by national standards, ranking the area 20th out of 326 districts in England. Hastings was also ranked 20th in the last IMD, indicating that its relative deprivation remains unchanged.
